In the near future, the Targeted Data Panel is presented as is currently available in Flux Notes. The summary section is at top.

The minimap is moved to the right so navigation does not obstruct view of a right handed user.

PORTRAIT

2.1 POC

50% of all use of small tablets is in portrait mode. Given that the main use case for Flux Notes on tablet is record review, targeting a portrait layout may be beneficial.

In this case, the navigational bar is on the bottom.

The patient control bar is again reconfigured to accomodate a narrower screen.

The elements for POC (note title, placeholders, and shortcut library) are reorganized a bit. Otherwise, follow same styling as for landscape.

More of the key data and features are available directly from the navigation bar. For example, the longitudinal and comprehensive timeline and treatment options tools present data and functions at a different level than, say, “Medications”, and should be organized as such within the application.
